Oldest Merchant Sold Groceries, More

In 1845 Charles Bridgman started a wholesale and retail grocery store with Alfred Hebard. When Bridgman retired in 1890, he was the oldest merchant in the city, having been active in business since 1840. A native of Massachusetts, he had come to Keene from New York State at the age of 25, having been advised that Keene's climate would agree with his malarial fever. He entered the store of Joseph Willard and soon became the junior member of the firm of Freeman & Bridgman. A few years later he bought out the general store of Denney & Briggs, establishing the firm of Bridgman & Hebard.

In the course of a few years he bought the entire business. He next moved to a large and handsome store fitted up especially for him, one of the largest in the state at that time. It was carried on by the firm of Bridgman, Sprague, & Mason, handling groceries, carpets, paints, paper hangings, and the like. Afterwards it was divided into two stores, and Bridgman pursued the grocery business in the south store until 1867. In 1866-67 he erected Bridgman's Block and moved into his new store in January of 1867. In 1890, upon completion of 50 years of business life in Keene, he sold the store to his son, Charles H.
