The Custom Of Warning Out Of Town

One of the more unfriendly customs during the late 1700s was known as "warning out of town." When a new family arrived in town and did not own their own land, the constable would often pay them a visit and warn them out of town.

Laws were in force which required that poor people should be cared for at the expense of the town where they settled. If a new family arrived which was thought to be a welfare burden, the constable would get a warrant to warn the family out of town. If a warrant of this type was recorded within one year of the date when a family arrived, the town could not be held responsible for their care in the future.

Most local towns used the warning out of town procedure, but by 1800 this practice was discontinued. Many of the people whom townspeople thought would be a burden eventually went on to become wealthy citizens and taxpayers.
