This "Private Mailing Card," circa 1900, depicted Denman Thompson's residence in West Swanzy.

Henry Denman Thompson (October 15, 1833 – April 14, 1911) was an American playwright and theatre actor. Thompson was with a vaudeville troupe when he wrote a short sketch about "Joshua Whitcomb," a New Hampshire "hayseed" who travels to the big city. In 1885, he rewrote his sketch into a four-act play, entitled The Old Homestead. The new play opened in Boston in April 1886 with Thompson in the lead role and became a very successful production that made him wealthy, with both a West Swanzy gentleman's farm and nearby lakefront summer cottage.

We make friends by accident!

This photo is labeled "Forty-Ton Tilting Rock, near 'Warmac,' East Swanzy, NH."

Now called Tiffin Rock, the massive glacial erratic boulder is perched on a sheet of granite. Tiffin Rock can be made to sway gently with a shove of the shoulder in just the right place. It has been a hiking destination for more than a century. Respectful hikers may find the trail to Tiffin Rock from a hayfield on Warmac Road across from Chebaco Kennel.

Apothecary Sold West Indian Goods, Flour

In 1813 John Wood and Captain Aaron Hall took in Timothy Hall, a relative of the captain's from Connecticut, to form the firm of A. & T. Nall. This apothecary store was on the site of the present Cheshire National Bank on Main Street and sold English and West Indian goods, as well as druggists' supplies. Though the name of John Wood did not appear in the firm's nomenclature, he was "the financial and substantial member of the concern." The business was the first, in 1822, to sell flour in a store, as previously it had been sold, along with meal and grain, only at the grist-mills. After nearly four decades this business landmark was forced to close in 1850, a combined result of expansion and business difficulties.
