Everything But A Jacket

Traditional wedding rentals generally include the tux or suit, pants, vest, shirt, tie, shoes, and sometimes, suspenders. Today, however, more and more brides are moving away from the traditional with a shift toward the no-jacket, heavily-complimented vest look. That is, vest, shirt, pants, shoes, and tie. Simple and elegant, the vest is a continuation of the English waistcoat, dating back to the 17th century. Today's styles include a variety of fabrics, such as faux tweed, houndstooth, and herringbone. With the popularity of barn weddings, the vest-look has never been more appropriate. For spring, summer, or fall weddings, they offer enhanced breathability, with the slender look you want from a suit coat, but without the weight or heat retention. And because vest size is based on chest measurement, they eliminate the kinds of problems that arise with do-it-yourself measuring, where incorrect sleeve lengths, tight-fitting jackets, and improper cuts are all too common.

Haberdasher's tip: don't trust a label, and never self-size. Let a paid professional measure you. A correct fit depends on it.
