Keene jail was constructed in 1833 of granite quarried in Roxbury. It was located on near where Mechanic Street is located today and served as the county jail until 1884, when the new jail was built on Washington Street.

In The 1950s

The population of Keene in 1950 was 15,638 and this year brought to Keene a special kind of entertainment: the Keene Drive In Theater, which opened off of lower Marlboro Street.

There was much celebration from June 28th to July 5th in 1953 as Keene hit its 200 years under its New Hampshire charter. A street dance was held, a huge parade, an air show, and historical exhibits were displayed. A time capsule was also buried in Central Square.

Also in 1953, the Keene Police Department added women police officers to its force. Myrtle Jennison – who was assigned to traffic duty in at the Symonds School – was the first.

Another major noteworthy happening in 1953 was the closing of Faulkner & Colony, the second oldest woolen mill in the nation run by the original family.
