In The 1980s

The population of Keene reached 21,449 in the 1980s. Henry David's Restaurant opened in the Asa Dunbar house (built in 1785). The restaurant was named after Henry David Thoreau, whose mother was born in the house. (Henry David's was once known as the Crystal Restaurant.)

Work was completed on the expansion of the Keene Public Library in the early 80s and the Colony Mill Marketplace opened for business.

Franklin O'Neal Field at Wheelock Park was dedicated. He was a long-time black softball player for Keene. Sun Foods – the largest supermarket in Keene – opened where Hannaford Supermarket sits today.

The new Recreation Center on Washington Street was built, with a portion of the original structure (which was originally the Cheshire Country Jail) left intact.

In February of 1989, Keene began a citywide recycling program of paper, plastic, and tin.

The reflecting pool at the Recreation Center on Washington Street was dedicated as a memorial to those who fought in WWI, WWII, Korea, Vietnam, and for who spent time as POWs.

The Women's National Modified Softball Tournament was held in Keene with a crowd of 65,000 people attending the three-day event. The tournament was won by the Keene team representing Kulick's Market.

Cedarcrest - a home for children who have mental or physical handicaps, was built in 1989/1990.

In The 1990s

In 1990, Keene Mill Outlet – the building that formerly housed railroad repair shops and Central Screw – opened.

In October of 1991, the first Harvest Festival in Keene was held. Also during this year, Keene Bambino Baseball won the state tournament and went to the National World Series in Colorado.

This decade also saw the dedication of a new baseball field at Wheelock Park. Toby Barrett of Keene helped to organize the construction of this field.

In 1992, Keene was entered into the Guinness Book of World Records for having the most carved pumpkins at the Harvest Festival.

Goodnow's Department Store closed after serving the people of Keene for many years, and Keene's 12-year-old Bambino Baseball team – coached by Tom Barrett, Conrad Fisk, and Kevin Watterson – made it to the World Series.
